

Dear Justine,

This season reminds us that growth is not just about planting seeds—it's also about harvesting what we've nurtured within ourselves. Too often we move quickly to "what's next" without pausing to honor how far we've come. Here are a few ways to truly reap the benefits of your inner work:

1. Reaping the Benefits of Your Inner Work

Take a quiet moment and reflect:

- What challenges have I moved through this year?
- What wisdom or strength has blossomed within me because of those challenges?
- What "fruit" am I ready to share with the world now?

Practice: Write down three inner qualities you've cultivated (like courage, compassion, or confidence). Keep them somewhere visible—a mirror, altar, or your workspace—as daily reminders of your harvest.

2. Gratitude Practices for Celebrating Progress

Gratitude turns your inner harvest into nourishment. It shifts your focus from "what's missing" to the abundance already here.

Practice:

- Harvest Journal: Each evening for the next week, write down one way you showed up for yourself that day. It could be setting a boundary, resting, or saying yes to an aligned opportunity.
- Gratitude Circle: Share one thing you're proud of and grateful for with a trusted friend, partner, or community. Saying it aloud amplifies the celebration.
- Embodied Gratitude: Place your hands over your heart and whisper "thank you" to yourself—for your resilience, for your growth, for who you've become.
